If you're reading this, it's safe to assume that you currently are or previously have been, in a relationship with mixed signals.

In the beginning everything is great, but then something changes.

Maybe one day he's saying and doing everything great but then the next day he does the exact opposite

And you're left confused because you really like the guy - you have the chemistry and when you're together you feel on top of the world, everything is perfect.

But on those other days, your heart is breaking apart and you just don't know what to do.

Well, you will now receive 3 powerful things you can do that will help you handle these mixed signals.

(in the last page of the report I show you how to know if you're actually getting mixed signals, or you are just misreading your man, so make sure you read this to the bottom before you make any decisions)

1) Get clear on what YOU want

I see this happen all the time, where women just want a partner. So they don't have clarity. Thoughts like "I want a man", "I want a guy", "I want to be in love" - just don't cut it, because they are not clear enough.

You need to get CRYSTAL CLEAR on the kind of relationship you want, and on the kind of man you want.

Now we're not talking about a huge list of 99 qualities... instead, what I mean by clear is: getting precise on those qualities and characteristics that you *ABSOLUTELY must have, if you are going to be in a relationship with a guy. They are a sort of a check list, which helps you see whether the guy you're dating is the guy you're really looking for.

So first, you must get clear on what you want.

2) Get clear on what you will and will not condone

A very common thing I see women do is saying one thing, and doing the complete opposite. For example they say they want a guy who doesn't just want sex. And when they find a guy who shows all the signals that he's interested in just that, they make excuses for being with him. This is the step where HONESTY with yourself is key.

You have to know that if you want a relationship, the kind of relationship that you deeply desire and deserve, you will have to make tough choices. Remember "You have to be willing to give up the good, to go for the great." - So get clear on what you will and will not tolerate. Once you have that as well, comes the third step.

3) Set clear boundaries and give yourself a deadline

These guys that give you mixed signals...guess what? They're always going to do that. So by you getting clear, it will help you see if this is what you actually want. By setting up your boundaries and having a precise deadline, you won't continue wasting your time. There are women who waste years and years in relationships with men who give mixed signals. The truth is this - the quality of your relationship is directly related to the quality of your choices and decision. If you let yourself be in a relationship with someone who sends confusing signals, that's what you'll keep getting. If you decide that you deserve something more, someone who gives you clear signals, who's consistently giving you what you need in order to be happy - then your love life is going to be completely different. Again, once you realize that the quality of your relationship is directly related to the quality of your choices and decision you get incredible power, but also great responsibility. If you allow mixed signals, guys are going to keep giving them. And you don't have to keep allowing it.

Now that you know what to do when you get mixed signals, the question is - are you really getting mixed signals or you are just misinterpreting your man?

Did you know the word "Love" means something completely different to a man than it does to a woman...?

And that when he says "I love you" he's not saying what you think he's saying (or what you hope he's saying) at all?
